Felicitation of Dr. Dattatray Kambale by Prof. B.N. Kharad

Dr. Dattatray Kambale explained how to identify and define Research Problems. He said a research problem is a definite or clear expression [statement] about an area of concern, a condition to be improved upon, a difficulty to be eliminated, or a troubling question that exists in scholarly literature, in theory, or within existing practice that points to a need for meaningful understanding and deliberate investigation. A research problem does not state how to do something, offer a vague or broad proposition, or present a value question. It is not always easy to formulate the research problem simply and clearly. It may take years to decide for some and just a few minutes for others to decide the research problem to be studied. The social issues may provide a broader prospect but it may not suggest a specific one. E.g., understanding economic background of society may not address the issues of unemployment in the same society therefore unemployment needs to be studied differently and individually to assess the underlying problems. The availability of resources like money, time, manpower, etc. also affects the selection of research problem.

He further explained the collection of data through questionnaires. He said this method of data collection is quite popular, particularly in case of big enquiries. It is being adopted by private individuals, research workers, private and public organizations and even by governments. In this method a questionnaire is sent (usually by post) to the persons concerned with a request to answer the questions and return the questionnaire. A questionnaire consists of a number of questions printed or typed in a definite order on a form or set of forms. The questionnaire is mailed to respondents who are expected to read and understand the questions and write down the reply in the space meant for the purpose in the questionnaire itself. The respondents have to answer the questions on their own. The method of collecting data by mailing the questionnaires to respondents is most extensively employed in various economic and business surveys.
